ISLAND OF FIRE BEACONS.

Known as the Island of Thanet-Margate and Ramsgate .-- Scenes of Historic Interest-People You Meet and Sights You Sec.

[Copyright, 1891.] Special Correspondence of the Intelligences

RAMSGATE, ENGLAND, Aug. 18, 1891. The Isle of Thanet—the Island of the Fire Beacons-once completely disconnected from Kent, but now wholly reclaimed, forms the northeasternmost projection of that historic county of England. It is only nine miles in length, and in most parts but five miles in breadth; but there is probably not in all England, and, for that matter, in the world, a bit of land so valuable for its agricultural possibilities, nor so completely a garden of delight for the millions to which it is accessible in millions to which it is accessible in summer.

Its situation is very bleak and open, from ifs extraordinary extent, through countless coves of sea front on the north, where it is washed by the Thames estuary, and on the east, where it is lashed by the ever restless tides of the Straits of Dover and the North Sea; but every square rood on which ancient rain, historic fortress or gay resort does not stand, is under the highest known state of cultivation. The reasons for this are: All Kent is London's truck garden; Thanet isle is every season actually covered by a coat of alga, or seaweed, obtainable by the farmers at only the expense of carriage; there are no hedges, which in some parts of England destroys so much produce, and the subsoil is chalk, which acts in wet weather as a sponge, and in droughts supplies the land with moisture, an extraordinary system of inhalation and exhalation, which gave rise to the ancient ouplet:

When England wrings
The island sings.

When England wrings The island sings.

The is and sings.

The is no commonable land nor an acre of waste land in the island. The old Kentish plow is still used by the farmers with stubborn pertinacity; and it is an odd sight to witness the plowman stop at the end of every furrow to take out his coulter and reverse it, an operation which takes half his time and gives ample leisure for the contemplation and enjoyment of good old conservative English wars. Half the farmers are winter fishermen, and all the lower classes of the coastwise villages follow the same vocation during both the summer and winter months.

HISTORIC SCENES.

HISTORIC SCENES.

The ancient timber-and-wattle cottage is still as commonly found as among the Norfolk Broads, and the mong the Noriok Broads, and the peasantry, notwithstanding their contact with hosts of city folk and tourists in summer, retain an extraordinary number of their ancient customs and superstitions. Were there no free-andeasy Margate and Ramsgate, in the isle of Thanet, there is no place in Great Britain where, in so compact an area, can be found such odd Old World studies as in this tiny piece of chalk land over against the wild North sea.

In its diminutive area, particularly on its coast line, are a score of shrines and resorts. At the edge of Pegwell bay, between Sandwich and Ramsgate, is the ancient farmhouse, "Ebbe's Fleet," the scone of the "landing of Hengist and Horsa," those heroic worthies of Saxon mythic warfare. At Pegwell itself the cliffs, with the blue lias intermixed with layers of shell, many thousands of years old, is a celebrated haunt of geologists. At Stonar, Vortigen defeated the Jutes, Vortimer was slain and buried, and Thurkill Innied at the head of the ferocious Norsemen.

At Minster, Egbert, king of Kent, commissioned his favorite and chief officer Thinor, to murder his two consins who lad claims to the crown. They were buried in Ethelbert's hall of state. This spot was revealed by a supernatural light which ever hovered over it, until the guiltyking, filled with remorse, made concession and repentence to the dead prince's sister, Dompneva, paid blood money (wergyld) and gave her as much land as a hind could run over at one course, on which to found a monastery. Thunor endeavored to stop the fleet creature by riding across its path, but the earth swallowed him and flung him into the infernal shadows to keep the dead princes company.

At Osengall Downs there is a wonderful old Saxon cemetery. Birchington hus the most beautiful girdle of elms of any village in England, and is noted as the olden residence of one Henry Crispe, commonly called "Bonjour" Crispe, from having been kept prisoner in France for many years and never having learned more than that word. At Daundelion are the ruins of

ODD BITS OF RELICS.

Broadstair has been made famous by Dickens in his sketch of "Our Watering Place,"in an early number of Household Words, and the Broadstair fishermen, who are as quaint and odd a lot as may be found on any coast, were during the early part of this century the most famous harvesters of the North sea and Icelandic fisheries. The North Foreland, Ptolemy's Cantium, is the extreme northeastern point of Kent. It has a fine old lighthouse, and commands one of the most magnificent and sublime sea view of England. The great naval engagement between the English and Dutch of June, 1660, in which the English were defeated, was fought off this point. Place," in an early number of Household

St. Nicholas-at-Wade, an ancient ford

St. Nicholas-at-Wade, an ancient ford back to the Kentish mainland, has one of the most interesting and quaint old churches of England. Its walls are built of sea worn flints with much rough brick, believed to be Roman, interspersed. The eastern dripstones of the tower window are incrusted with nests of the "temple haunting martlet."

Of all these odd bits of misty age relics, dim old Reculver, on the widening shores of the Thames extuary, with its grassy meads. winding river and nestling hamlets for a sweet perspective behind, is perhaps the most winsome and romantic. It was here that King Ethlebert, after his conversion and baptism by St. Augustine, took up his abode and built himself a palace out of the Roman fortress. The ancient town has nearly all been literally eaten away and engiled by the sea. What is left of the most antiquated picture—cottages, inn, which bears the name of King Ethelbert, and which peeps through the masses of ivy, signal towers and all—instantly carries the mind back to the time of the Saxon king, who held his glorious court at Reculver.

PICTURESQUE SCRNE. Douglas Jerrold's dream of the old place having suffered only a sea change, and that "fathoms deep the town still place having suffered only a sea change, and that "fathoms deep the town still stands, that busy life goes on, that people of an odd, sea green aspect it may be, still carry on the work of mortal brenthing, make love, beget little ones and die," comes swiftly to each beholder. All green things are rampant and luxurious upon the crumbling cliffs. As you stand on the shore, looking up to the broken wall surmounted by those tall sister towers, the seagulls whirl and scream about and above and old ocean seems to join their wail in weird, wild requiem.

All these and many more spots of the most charming aspect and deepest historic interest are wishin a two hours walk of either Margate or Ramsgate. These waterside resorts, also upon the little islet, are respectively located on the northern and eastern shores. Margate looks out upon the Thames estuary and North sea, and Ramsgate faces the Straits of Dover. They are to London precisely what Coney Island, Manhattan Beach and Rockaway are to New York, save that, as they are both ancient cities, their all-the-year resident population is far greater; they are old and respectable ports of entry; their harbor seenes, espechally in confection with their fishing fleets, are at all seasons curious and picturesque. The ancient and venerable in hones, shops, lighthouses, quays and warehouses form a mellow and colored background to innumerable modern structural elegancies, and as the accommodations in "indgings," the more spruce and dignified apartments in dainty and coy old inns and in great modern lottels, are vastly more important, the places have more the everyday air of occupation and enjoyment, and are the less dependent upon the sudden accession of enormous numbers of one day visitors, though the latter flood down from London in mighty human tides.

Both Margate and Ramsgate are though the latter flood down from London in mighty human tides.

Both Margate and Ramsgate 'are reached by the London & Southeastern railway and by the channel steamers from London bridge. From June until October the former sets down an average of 10,000 and the latter an average of 2,000 Londoners daily at the two resorts, while on Saturdays frequently 100,000 "trippeos," as one day excursionists are called, are often gathered here from all quarters. The English people of all classes make much of what they call their "week ends," The Saturday half holiday is universal.

LIPE AT THE RESORTS.

LIFE AT THE RESORTS.

While the business man's week "end" may begin on Friday evening, the clerks' and all manner of lowly workers' clerks' and all manner of lowly workers'
"week end" begins at one minute after noon on Saturday, and in England, of all countries I know, the transportation lines stand ready to move millions of men and women to whatever seaside or country points they may wish to go and to return them to their homes in time for Monday morning's dradgeries with a celerity and cheapness which are positively astounding.

The London popular heart leans more to Margate and Ramsgate than to much nearer Gravesend, or to grander and more stirring Brighton. The ride across Kent by rail is like whirling through a wondrons garden. The seent of the grasses and grains, the odor of the vast strawborry beds, and the soporific incense of the forests of hops, are in themselves a glorious journey, while the trip by steamer down the historic Thames and out into the open sea has all the glamor and possibilities experienced by the worthy "Tugges" on their memorable trip to Ramsgate, after their sudden rise in the world, as precedent to their entering London society.

Once at Margate there is the inevitable pier, and a grand reach of rock, shingle and sand in noble crescent, whose horns are glorious cliffs surmounted by picturesque homes. The town dips gracefully in all directions to the splendid esplanade, and this and the arena of foreshore beneath it are the whole day long filled with a seething mass of London "Arrys" and "Arriets." If there is any chance of the visitor forgetting what his special mission is in Margate there are fitty people at hand to jog his memory and to take care that it is carried out with all the vigor and enthusiasm that is possible.

There is the Hall-by-the-sea, where you can attend afternoon concerts and inke care that it is carried out with all the vigor and enthusiasm that is possible.

There is the Hall-by-the-sea, where you can attend afternoon concerts and evening concerts, where you can visit the Zoological gardens attached thereto, and dance to your heart's content in the ballroom if so "disposed." There is the Royal Theatre; there is the marine Palace, with its excellent variety entertainment, and its balls on Saurdays and Mondays. There are interesting swimming entertainments at the Marine Palace baths; and there is the Grotto, with its curious shellwork in the Dane for those who choose to investigate it. In addition to these there are all sorts of minor entertainments and diversions.

There are sea excursions morning, afternoon and evening in the good steamer India. There are trips in sailing boats of all descriptions. There are country jaunts in every species of conveyance, and trips to be taken to that oll Roman fortress, the Reculver; to that pretty little bungalow hamlet, Birchington, where Rosetti, lived and died; to Kingsgate, and a little farther on to the North Foreland lighthouse, where the clock wonders of the revolving light can be inspected. Returning to Margate itself there is the band on the jetty. There are bands on the sands, there are bands over the way and bands around the corner. There are conjurers, there are acrobats, there are "niggers" and other performers, who have a wonderful pit audience on the sands, supported by an enthusiastic dress circle behind the railings of the ceplannale.

There are sellers of shrimp and the

THE PEOPLE YOU MEET. There are sellers of shrimp and the photographic phalanaxes; there are shops full of the most curious toys shops full of the most curious toys whittled out by sailors; there are panoramas and cycloramas; there are glass-blowers, conjurors and grinders, who placard the announcement upon their wares of "Dear Mothers," "Dear Old Dads," "Pear Old Jacks," and "Dear Old Mothers-in-law—always in stock!" And there are the heartiest lovers are never ashamed of it. In railway carriages, in public parks, at concept halis and here at Margate and Ramagate the staccato of rousing smacks runs from end to end of the golden sands, a chirrupy picket fire of Love's advance forces. Nobody is shocked. Everybody is glad. "'Arry, if you love me, be 'arty!" is 'Arriet's invitation to her lover, and 'Arry fails not of improving the sunny hours at Margate and Ramagate.

The roilieking humors of the Ramagate sands are precisely the same. At both places London people come.

fly men and 'bus drivers roar it and bellow it. The boatmen, bathing ma-chine men, waiters, porters, photog-raphers, donkey boys and "busketers" seem to exist in the same atmosphere of "going it." Drinks are swallowed at a gulp; meals are holted; everybody lunges; the faces of all are a crimson stew. All tastes and inclinations are a gulp; the faces of all are a crimson stew. All tastes and inclinations are catered to.

It is the one and the only pleasure day of the whole year to perhaps a million souls who come to Margate and Ramsgate. If these have no time to study the grand rocks of Margate and the grander chalk cliffs of Ramsgate, if the real beauty of the former is never recognized and the charm of the endless shades of the antique tarraces of the latter wholly escape those who come to ricochet in lurid heat and livid nervousness through a thousand uncouth divertisements, it is not because Merry Mother Margate holds not innumerable noble charms, or "Royal Ramsgate," the splendid "Roman's Gate" to Britain is not itself one of the most picturesque and old seaside cities of the world.

Little Loss of Time.

The loss of time in cases of sickness is no small item to working people. A Pennsylvania minister teils how an attack of colic or diarrhea may be cared in the least possible time. "I had no occasion to use Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhea Remedy in my own family, but have tried it on other parties. With one for colic; one dose cured. With another for diarrhea, and two doses cured him. From the satisfaction it gave in the cases tried, I must say I believe it is all the manufacturers claim for it." Rev. J. K.
